

Oxford Studies in Roman Society and Law

General editors

Dr Paul du Plessis, University of Edinburgh

Professor Judith Evans Grubbs, Washington University, St Louis, Missouri

The aim of this timely new monograph series is to create an interdisciplinary forum devoted to the interaction between two established academic disciplines, legal history and ancient history, in the context of the study of Roman law. Focussing on the relationship of law to society, the volumes will cover the most significant periods of Roman law (up to the death of Justinian in 565) so as to provide a balanced view of growth, decline, and resurgence. Most importantly, the series will provoke general debate over the extent to which legal rules should be examined in light of the society which produced them in order to understand their purpose and efficacy.

The editors would welcome any proposals that fit the aims of the series.
